Canadian Forces (32 Signal Regiment)

32 Signal Regiment is the communication unit of 32 Canadian Brigade Group in the greater Toronto region. We are part-time and full-time Reserve and Regular Force tradespersons, civilian students, professionals, business people, and public servants - citizens who enjoy contributing to our country through the profession of arms as signallers. We are members of the militia - the Army Reserve of the Canadian Armed Forces. 32 Signal Regiment encompasses the following elements:

1. Regimental command section.
2. 1 Squadron (ATHENA) – at Canadian Forces Base Borden.
3. 2 Squadron (2nd Signalling Company) – at Fort York Armoury, Toronto.

The role of 32 Signal Regiment is to provide commanders and staffs within 32 Canadian Brigade Group the means to exercise command and control. We often provide deployed facilities and services to units and groups from the Brigade for training in combat operations or in readiness for domestic emergencies. This includes transportation in military trucks and trailers, physical security, tents and furniture, electrical power generation and distribution, heating, lighting, and other amenities for sustaining a headquarters facility in austere conditions. Our teams of signallers establish IRIS tactical radio networks, satellite rear links, local cable networks, commercial network connectivity, and computer networks including the Land Command Support System (UNCLASSIFIED). We also support information management and provide information technology support services. In some instances we join civilian amateur radio channels and communicate with radio operators across North America and other continents. Using cryptographic equipment and other communications security measures, we often provide secure networks as well.
