Anthropology HBA Arts Programs
Department of Anthropology at the University of Toronto Mississauga

Our Major, Specialist and Minor Anthropology Arts programs focus on developing graduates who are well-prepared for careers and further education paths.

What can you study?

Sociocultural Anthropology is the study of human individuals and societies, their behaviours and beliefs, and everything about human culture.

Linguistic Anthropology is the study of human communication across the globe, attempting to understand how language and linguistic practices intersect with cultural processes, worldviews, ideologies and identities.

Generalist Anthropology refers to a broad grounding in the various subfields of anthropology. This approach is ideal for undergraduate students who want a broad skill-set that is easily transferable into the work-world and into many fields of graduate study.

Examples of courses you can take

- ANT206H5 Culture and Communication
- ANT215H5 How Should One Live? An Introduction to the Anthropology of Ethics
- ANT216H5 Racketeers, Smugglers and Pirates: Anthropology of Illegality
- ANT217H5 Anthropology of Law
- ANT322H5 Anthropology of Youth
- ANT368H5 World Religions and Ecology

Anthropology pairs well with many other disciplines for a double major or other program combination. You can take an Anthropology program in conjunction with Sociology, History, Political Science, or many other areas of study!

Graduate and professional pathways

Anthropology programs provide an excellent foundation for many graduate and professional school pathways, such as:

- Law
- Health care
- Business
- Journalism
- Teaching
- and more!

Click a link below for more information

Career Information
Anthropology Subfields
Take our virtual tour
Program Details