Overview of the Types of Careers in Law

Law is a profession that touches upon a number of different areas and therefore there are a number of different law streams. Some of these streams are listed below.

Law Streams

- Corporate/Commercial Law - involves organizing businesses, mostly contracts, liability, or intellectual property.
- Tax Law - generally involves assisting businesses with their taxes and advising clients and individuals about tax loopholes.
- Intellectual Property Law - is the law of copyrights, trademarks, and patents
- Family Law - involves arranging for people’s day to day family issues, such as adoption, divorce, and wills.
- Criminal Law – used in the cases where people commit crimes
- Constitutional Law - involves matters pertaining to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms such as ensuring individual rights under the Charter and the division of powers between the federal government and the provincial governments.
- Civil Litigates - deal mostly with claims involving wrongdoing: tort law, and contracts.
- International Law – involves working with multinational corporations and dealing with international issues such as human rights.
- General Practitioners – perform a variety of tasks for individual, smaller clients such as drawing up real estate deals, contracts, as well as family law concerns.
- Labour/Employment Law - From a management perspective, labour lawyers advise their clients (employers) on employment law such as working conditions, wrongful dismissal etc. From a labour perspective, labour lawyers work with individuals, or unions advising members how to pursue various claims (such as pursuing workers compensation, human rights or labour code violations, or wrongful dismissal suits).
- Environmental law – Work towards public, corporate and government interests regarding the environment

In addition to the many different types of law, there are also many nontraditional legal careers for which a law degree can be useful. This can include working for a non-profit organization or a non-governmental organization, an advocacy group, a community legal clinic or work in the government in policy. In addition, you can go on to do your masters degree or PHD degree in law and teach, or do law-related things like becoming a professor, or a career counselor at a law school. Lawyers targeting politics typically practice for a number of years prior to entering the political realm. Many universities also offer joint law programs. For instance, the University of Toronto Faculty of Law provides students with the option to combine their law degree with other subject areas e.g. Social Work.
Applying to Law School/
Attending Law School

What University Background is Required

Gaining admission into law school is competitive. To be considered for law school, candidates must have at least 2-3 years of undergraduate study. The requirements vary for each law school, however the basic requirements usually include a combination of a candidate’s GPA (minimum of B+/A average) and LSAT score (minimum of 70-85). Many law schools have regular, mature and aboriginal categories for admission as well. Each applicant is considered and compared with others in the same category. In addition, most law schools also consider their candidates’ extracurricular activities and past work experiences.

What is the LSAT?

The Law School Admission Test (LSAT) is a half-day multiple choice standardized test issued by the Law School Admissions Council (LSAC). The test is for admission consideration into law schools. It is designed to test reading comprehension, analytical reasoning, logical reasoning and writing (by means of a writing sample). There is also one experimental section that is not graded.

How to register for the LSAT:

Applicants can register by phone (215) 968-1001, by web by visiting the LSAC website: www.lsac.org

Check the LSAC website for test dates, locations and deadlines.

Tip: Check each law school’s requirement as to the date by which you must have written your LSAT. This may encourage you to write at an earlier setting.

How to apply to Ontario Universities:

The admission process is handled centrally by the Ontario Law School Application Service (OLSAS) http://www.ouac.on.ca/olsas. They are a division of the Ontario Universities Application Centre (OUAS).

Tip: It is a good idea to order an application from OLSAS at least one year prior to applying to Law School. This will give you an idea of what is required and will help you start the process as early as possible.

Tip: It is recommended that applicants allow from between 5-25 hours of preparation time in advance of submitting their application.

Once Accepted into Law School:

www.utm.utoronto.ca/careers
• Complete the three years of study towards a Bachelor of Law (LL.B) or Juris Doctor (J.D.)*
  * Beginning with the Class of 2004, the University of Toronto Faculty of Law will be only be offering the J.D. designation (increasingly, the international standard for a second entry law program) in place of the LL.B degree. According to Canada’s provincial law societies, the J.D.
    designation is equivalent to the LL.B. for admission to the bar.

Practicing Law in Ontario:

As required by the Bar Admissions Course, to practice law in Ontario, law students must successfully complete:

• One year of Articling – supervised work with a law firm
• Teaching portion which includes a one-month practice skills program prior to articling and a three-month classroom program with written exams after articling.

Building Your Experience During University

In order to gain an edge in the law profession, it is essential for one to gain experience through work, community volunteering and extra-curricular activities. The following are some ways:

School Clubs/Societies

A great way to gain exposure to applying to law school and the law profession is to take part in the activities organized by groups on campus. A club on campus which focuses on this is the Pre-Law Society/Political Science Association. For more information about this club, check out their website at http://utmplsa.waywardhearts.com/. This group organizing speaker sessions, mock LSAT sessions, discussion groups, etcetera for students at the UTM campus.

Getting involved with various groups on campus will allow you to build upon essential skills needed for the law profession such as public speaking, debating skills, etc.

Part-Time/Full-Time Work

Part-time/Full-time work in different settings has the potential to allow one to gain first hand experience into the day-to-day life of a lawyer and gain necessary skills. The Career Centre has many job postings related to the law profession. You can also take a look at some de-listed positions as well to get an idea of the kinds of potential work available.

Internship description: The Canadian Lawyers Association for International Human Rights (CLAIHR) in co-ordination with the Canadian Bar Association (CAB) is offering internships abroad to recent law school graduates. This internship program arranges for law students to be placed with human rights law groups in various developing countries, such as Bolivia and Guyana. In cooperation with law faculties across Canada, the internship provides an opportunity for young Canadian law students to participate "directly in the day-to-day work of human rights groups in developing countries". As part of the internship, interns will research various human rights issues (e.g., violence against women, labour law, refugee rights) and prepare legal analyses.

Trends in Law

Employment Prospect

Over the next five years: Average

Employment for this occupation is expected to grow about as fast as the average for all occupations through the year 2007. While job growth will create new positions, the majority of job openings will stem from replacement needs as workers retire. Demand for lawyers is linked to population growth and the volume of business activity. The high cost of legal services, however, may lead to increased use of dispute-resolution systems in which lawyers’ services are not mandatory. Also, electronic filings and the growth of computerized legal databases may increase the use of paralegal technicians instead of lawyers.

Some lawyers are particularly affected by business cycles in the economy. Demand for legal services involving real estate transactions, mergers and acquisitions tend to decline during a recession, while those involving bankruptcy activities increases. Lawyers require good interpersonal skills and knowledge about the community where they practice.
